PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 12, 1860 Third and Wainut streets, between M. Presbury, the proprietor of the Girard House, and James Edwards, one of the owners of that property. The lie passed between them, when Edwards struck Presbury on the face with a came, drawing blood. Presbury drew bletol and fired two about seither of which took effect, except on the floot of a bystander. Edwards then struck Presbury with his flet, when the parties were separated and Presbury arrested. The difficulty arose out of a litigation relative to the Girard House property, between the brokers George and James Edwards, which may result to corge and James Edwards, which may result in irement of the present proprietors of the Girard to Nashville, where they propose opening a new
